

NUTRITION COUNSELING

Nutrition counseling is a process of finding the solution to the child's nutritional problem together with their mother or caregiver. It is a two-way process during which the mother is actively involved in describing the child's problems as well as participating in analyzing the causes and identifying the available resources and solutions.

Primary targets of nutrition counseling include pregnant, lactating women, parents and guardians with underweight children and those with low-birth-weight infants. It also includes all individual who needs nutrition counseling
